TERRACE WINE LIST

Biodynamic viticulture stems from the ideas and suggestions of Rudolf Steiner, whose Agriculture course in 1924 spun off much of the organic movement. It utilizes a holistic approach to farming and views the vineyard as an interrelated unit placing emphasis on the balance between the soil, vines and animals in a close self-nourishing system. This philosophy places high importance on composts and manures without the use of chemical fertilizers. It does use a number of fermented herbal and mineral preparations for compost additives and sprays. The practice also utilizes the astronomical calendar for sowing and planting. Biodynamic wines may be organic or preservative-free.

Many famous wineries and vineyards profess to use these techniques.

The Organic vineyards is managed without the use of systemic fungicides (fungus control), insecticides (bug control), herbicides (weed control) or synthetic fertilizers. Metal salts tend to be used for fungus control; e.g. sulfur and copper. Biological agents can be used for insect control; e.g. bacteria (Bacillus thuringiensis), parasitic wasps (Trichogramma carverae) or pheromone/food traps. Vines can be fertilized via compost mulches.

TERRACE WINE LIST

Sustainability looks at the environmental system as a whole. In the vineyard, it may incorporate manmade products or “natural” products, and it will likely use integrated pest management (IPM) techniques.

One of the reasons more and more people are gravitating toward Sustainable viticulture is certainly the high quality of the wines it produces. But the other, larger reason is legacy. By practicing Sustainable grape growing and winemaking, we are ensuring that the land, the animals, the rivers to which many of our vineyards drain, and the fish in those rivers, will still be here for generations to come.
